Claims 59, 60, and 63-66 are withdrawn from further consideration pursuant to 37 CFR 1.142(b) as being drawn to a nonelected species, there being no allowable generic or linking claim. Election was made without traverse in the reply filed on 5/2/2008.

The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

Claims 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 14, and 62 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Samesreuther et al.

Samesreuther et al. show a heat exchanger wall design for containers with plural tubes for heat exchange fluid welded to one side of the container wall. The recitations in claims 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, and 62 regarding the velocity of the heat transfer fluid flowing through the claimed heat exchanger in use, the temperature change, the inventory of fluid to be heated or cooled, the residence time, etc. all concern the intended method of using the claimed product and cannot structurally distinguish over the prior art. These parameters will depend entirely on factors such as the temperature difference of fluids exchanging heat, the pressure differential applied between the inlets and outlets, and so on; at best such recitations require the prior art device be capable of being used in such flow regimes and with such parameters. Clearly, the exchanger wall of Samesreuther et al. could be used with virtually any fluid or liquid or gas flowing at virtually any velocity at virtually any initial temperature differential. See MPEP 2114.

Claims 1, 14, and 61 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Baumann.

Note that Baumann clearly teaches the use of plural independently supplied tapered (variable cross sectional area) conduits forming a duct through which gas or fluid may pass to exchange heat with the fluid within the pipes 6. Note also Fig. 3, showing that the tubes may be bonded to a ceramic layer 11 that is interposed between the duct interior and the pipe walls and serves as a containment barrier.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claim 3 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Samesreuther et al.

Although Samesreuther et al. do not give specific values for the tube diameter of tubes b, they indicate that the tubes may be of "various forms besides rectilinear . . . and of any desired diameter". One skilled in the art would readily comprehend that the tube diameter would determine the flow capacity and pressure drop produced for the fluid flowing within the tubes, and it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the instant invention was made to select an appropriate diameter for a given application of the disclosed heat exchange wall.

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

The remaining references of record show various heat exchanger wall designs.
